

Society for Industrial and Organisational Psychology Australia

The Death of "Rational Economics"

Professional Development Session

Date: Monday, 2 September 2019

Venue: Chartered Accountants Australia and New Zealand
33 Erskine Street, Sydney 2000

Time: 5.30pm - 7pm

Registration commences from 5.15pm*

What is it all about?

The concept of "the rational man" and economically rational decision making has permeated management and leadership theory and practice for over half a century.

More recently, behavioural theories from psychology and sociology have provided more convincing explanations for the decisions made by economic actors.

This context will be used to explore the role of psychologists in modern business and the value that they can bring to commerce and commercial enterprise.
